

The Bark scale is the scale that is made up of critical ranges in relation to human hearing. Its importance lies in the use of a technique that extracts energy from certain frequencies. Thus, the 25 critical bands of the Bark scale are used to apply a filter in each of the bands, as well as the energy extraction, making it possible to calculate a characteristic vector that resembles the signal that the ear delivers to the brain and characterizes the voiced signal.